HISTORICAL NOTES Alexander Munro was granted the land on which the kitchen now stands in 1896 and built the kitchen the following year. The kitchen was located outside the house due to fire risk. Munro was a large land owner in the Denman area, and his holdings can be equated to those of Blaxlands. Munro and his family actually lived in the kitchen before the homestead was constructed. H.A. Stacey purchased the property in 1900 and in 1914 Stacey moved to the second homestead when the dairy began and the kitchen was moved 200 metres for closer proximity to the new house. The original homestead was later used as the shearing shed. Bill Wolfgang, another dairy farmer bought the property in 1916 and it is still in the family today. Interestingly, the Glen Munro homestead was named after Alexander Munro's son, Glen, who was slightly disabled.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE Historically the building has local historic significance for its close identification with the history of the Glenmunro property and the opening up of the area by Alexander Munro to dairy farming in the late 19th century. Socially the building is of local significance to the Wolfgang family who have occupied the property for eighty years. Scientifically, since the building is substantially intact, it has local significance for its potential to reveal information which could contribute to an understanding of the lifestyle of pioneer dairy farmers in the Denman area in the late 19th century.
