HISTORICAL NOTES Standing on a grant to George Forbes (the brother of the Chief Justice of NSW) in 1825, Edinglassie was bought by James White in 1839. His son, also James White, built the present house in two stages, c.1880 and 1895 to a design by J. Horbury Hunt. It was retained in the family until 1959 then sold to A.R. Morisby who sold it to R. Oatley in 1977. It is now owned by Pacific Power. The house is typical of Horbury Hunt's country houses. The original homestead is said to form part of the Hunt design.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE Historically, this intact homestead with its outbuildings, is possibly the first granted and developed and the largest anywhere in the region and because of its significance to the White family in the latter 19th century, is of great significance to the region and perhaps the state. Aesthetically it is representative of type at the regional level. It has regional social significance because of its place in the social history of Muswellbrook over a period of a century, a period in which royalty stayed there. It is continuously in demand by filmmakers. Scientifically it is of significance to the region and state for its potential to reveal information which could contribute to an understanding of the lifestyle, influence and scope of activities of the region's most significant pioneer pastoralists of the early 19th century. The group has regional rarity.
