HISTORICAL NOTES The Rumbo Bush School, built c.1908 by the NSW Department of Education, was originally located near Woodlands Stud at Saddlers Creek but moved to its present site in 1906 to be more accessible to the children who travelled from Denman and the surrounding area. These students rode to school by horse and others who lived nearby came on foot. The move to the present site required cutting the school in parts. The school rented the land for a 'peppercorn rental', one shilling a year for one acre of land. The maximum number of students at the school was 26 in 1928 and there was the need for a fulltime teacher who was accommodated at Mayland. The school week consisted of a five day week with only half a day on Fridays. The school was inspected regularly by the school inspector. The Rumbo School was closed during the wars and from 1932 to 1940 the government provided subsidised teachers. The school was last used in 1948.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE The historic significance of the building is compromised by its move but the building retains local historic significance for its association with Woodlands Stud and then for serving a larger local catchment when it was moved. It has local rarity of type aesthetically and has local social and scientific significance. Its local social significance derives from its importance to the descendants of generations of local area residents, while its local scientific significance relates to its potential to reveal information that could contribute to an understanding of the form and scale of the provision of public school education in remote Upper Hunter locations in the early to mid 20th century.
